Loading the cart, please wait. the opinions expressed by the contributors of entrepreneurs are their own. telecommuting has exploded in recent years alongside technological advances and globalization. as digital and economic landscapes have changed, so they have our workplaces. both employers and employees want greater flexibility and mobility of work, and technology exists to meet these needs. As a result, the growing number of companies offer employees the possibility of remote control. working remotely is replacing the traditional experience of commuting to a brick and mortar office and working in a cubicle. between 2005 and 2012, telecommuting grew 79and is expected only to increase in the future. If you are a remote control, you might find that working from home is not exactly a walk in the park. Let's face it – it's too easy to blur the boundaries between work and home, and do things that distract you from your work. You will be tempted to run personal commissions or stream Netflix. When you're done, half of your day of work is gone. Telecommuting can seriously cut your productivity, but it is not necessary. Here are several tips to transform your telecommute into your most productive day of work.1 Stay on a routine. Keep the same program at home as you do when you are in the office. This is useful for a number of reasons. Since you are on the same calendar of your colleagues, you can ask and answer questions promptly. Another advantage is that it adheres to a normal routine. It is invoking to sleep and start the working day late. But this could also mean working through dinner and even after midnight. Based on a reasonable work programme, it will ensure both maximum productivity and a healthy working life balance. Related: Why are companies still avoiding Telecommuting?2. Have a designated office space. Identify a place in your home where you work better without distractions. Design space like your office, and nothing else. Of course, it is not enough simply to choose a desk, open the laptop and get to work. One of the most important things is that you create a favorable atmosphere for work. Make sure youan environment devoid of encumbrance to maximise organization and productivity. have folders to store files and keep an inventory. In this way you save time (and money!) looking for things. an ordered office space also helps you look professional during video calls.3 adjust the environment. take advantage of working alone by changing your environment to meet your needs. a study by the national bureau of economic research suggests that warm temperatures lead to decline in economic productivity, to avoid a slow working day, set the thermostat at a temperature that is more comfortable for you. Other researchers found that playing natural sounds in the background improves employee mood and work efficiency. add natural sounds to your playlist to optimize your ability to focus on your work. Standing while you work can improve your mood and your physical health. you can see psychological and physiological improvements from standing for an hour a day. get a desk standing to increase your mood and concentration as you reply email and write reports. However, if you do not feel like getting hundreds of dollars for a standing desk, you can build your own for just over $20.5 get more sleep. use the commuting time you save to work at home to get more closed eye. the lack of sleep is linked to a lower productivity of work, with fatigueEstimated decline at cost almost $2,000 per year per employee. When your brain does not sleep, you are more prone to anger, slur your speech and make risky decisions. These are not the types of behavior you want to expose during work. So, have a good night rest to keep you alert during the day and ready to face any challenge.6. Eat lunch. While at home, it is easy to eat all day without having a proper meal. If you are grazing on chips and candies, you are not getting nutrition you need to keep your energy levels constant and mental clarity. Make sure to put aside time to eat a well rounded lunch that will help you beat the afternoon slump. And don't eat lunch at the desk. Take your lunch elsewhere to give yourself a mental break and reduce fatigue.7. Take breaks. Last but not least, do not forget to pause what you are doing, get away from the desk and relax for a few minutes. According to a survey conducted by The Energy Project and the Harvard Business Review of mostly white-collar employees in different industries, employees reported more positive work results if they take regular breaks. Compared to employees who do not take breaks or just a break, those who rest and relax every 90 minutes have been more likely to signal a higher level of attention and well-being, as well as a greater creative thinking ability. Instead of sitting at the desk during breaks, make two minutes walk to improve your health. Use rest breaks to re-energize and get your creativeffluent! Over the past 10 years, I've telecommuted on-and-off. Although I have always had an office away from home, I usually do more when I jump my commuter and get to work in my private space, personal.
